

Adventure tourism: An experience through culture and biodiversity at the frontier of Patagonia

Embark on a transformative journey into the endemic biodiversity of the La Araucanía Region and how conservation, sustainability and ancestral knowledge are vital for responsible travel experiences.

Pre-requisites: Interest in natural environment, intercultural exchange with indigenous people, adequate physical fitness

Target audience: Undergraduate, graduate students, and professionals related to tourism, ecotourism, geography, environment, anthropology, cultural studies.

Activities: Experiential learning through outdoor activities, and interactions with the Mapuche people, culture, and environment.

Timeframe: September to April

Duration: 72 hours, two weeks